What is Palliative Care?

Palliative Care is a service for patients with serious or life threatening illnesses aimed at relief of symptoms and improvement in the quality of life throughout the course of their illness or condition. Conditions appropriate for the service may include but are not limited to cancer, heart and lung disease.

How is Palliative Care Different from Hospice?

Palliative care is a movement that has grown quietly, but steadily, over the past several years. It is often referred to without being fully understood. Unfortunately, it tends to be equated with hospice or "end of life" care.

While palliative care is often closely allied with both of these, it is actually a broader concept.

It is certainly appropriate for patients with a terminal illness, but since palliative care focuses on symptom relief, improved function, and general quality of life, it serves individuals and their families who have chronic and/or long-term diseases as well.

Palliative Medicine includes medical concerns such as pain management, but also recognizes the need for psycho-social, spiritual, and other services.
